PROFESSIONAL SUMMARY

I have eight years of academic experience in higher education as an educator and a researcher in Social Work and Community Development. My teaching experience spans various levels within the social work and community development programme, and I have actively contributed to curriculum development, crafting and adapting content for various courses. Over the years, I have successfully supervised and graduated five master's students while maintaining a manageable workload in postgraduate supervision. I have served in various leadership positions, including Deputy Head of Department. My scholarly research contributions extend to local and international spheres, with a robust presence in reputable peer-reviewed journals. I have published 16 publications showcasing my diverse research interests in social work education and practice. The publications incorporate a mixture of single authorship, collaborative efforts with postgraduate students under my mentorship, joint projects with fellow social work educators from different universities, and interdisciplinary initiatives focusing on two main themes of my research interest: cultural competence and radical social work. This track record underscores my ability to conduct research independently and operate within a research network, emphasizing my collaborative spirit and aptitude for teamwork. I am a productive researcher and well-rounded academic, leveraging every available opportunity and resource to contribute to research, refine teaching methodologies, and actively engage in impactful social initiatives. Upholding the values of excellence, accountability, integrity, innovation, and leadership in my research and teaching practices, I am dedicated to conducting high-quality research that improves social work education and practice. Based on my consistent and commendable research trajectory, I have an NRF Y Rating, which I received in 2023.
